

Week 1 – Status Report

My goals for this week are to complete all of the assignments, research topics, and discussion post and responses before their due dates. As of right now, I have read all of the research assignments, completed the introduction discussion post, responded to three of my classmate's introduction posts, and completed the call to action assignment about role models. I have set up my Trello board and invited my professor and my classmates. At this point, I am still working on getting my GitHub set up from my last project and portfolio class.

I have quite a few challenges this week. My main challenge is balancing time management, because I work full time and attend Full Sail full time, while taking care of my personal responsibilities. Another challenge I seem to be experiencing is getting back into the swing of things and using GitHub. I struggled with GitHub in my last portfolio class, so I hope by the end of this month to be more at ease with its use and functionality.

My accomplishments this week are that I was able to get a majority of my assignments and research completed well before their due dates. Another accomplishment is the fact that I better understand the differences; both the good and the bad, of the agile methodology and how it affects project management.
